Holiday Potluck December 5th

Just a reminder—the WHS Holiday Potluck is fast approaching! This year, it will be held on Tuesday, December 5th. Also, Board Member Chris Egan is asking for donations of small succulents that can be used for living wreaths to decorate the tables. If any one has small potted succulents or cuttings, please bring them to the next meeting for Chris. Thank you!

Gardening with Chickens

Chickens in the suburbs? Actually, this isn't as crazy as it sounds. I have a small flock of hens in my garden for pleasure and also to help keep garden pests at bay. They provide many benefits to the garden in addition to fresh eggs. First, they absolutely adore slugs and other garden pests. When let out to roam the back yard in the mornings, they devour any slugs they find still out in the morning dew (in the spring and early summer - that's a lot of slugs!). Also, all I have to do is to tip up my pots and any slugs or earwigs hiding underneath are quickly devoured. Another delicacy on the chicken's menu is dandelions. These seem to be some of their favorite greens, and the hens love to pick at them while they are out or wait for me to toss them into their run. Of course, you do need to keep the hens out of your vegetable bed if you don't want them to help themselves, but I find a short fence of chicken wire does the job well.

People may not think of it immediately, but one of the best benefits of owning chickens is 'black gold' - their aged droppings make for absolutely one of the best fertilizers you can find. I add the droppings from their hen house to my compost pile along with spent hay from their nests, and always have a supply of rich, fertile compost for the garden.

All in all, keeping chickens in your backyard can be a move towards a more fertile, organic, and pesticide-free garden, in addition to the liveliness they add to the scene. Please be sure to check with your city about whether it is legal to keep chickens in your area first, and remember your neighbors—you don't need a rooster to have a group of happy, productive hens! ~Michelle Bond

Raffle Table

Thank you everyone for all the wonderful plants donated for the October raffle table. Our membership deserves a big hand of appreciation. The November table will be supplied by the Board, but as usual, we always welcome donations of those rare, exciting, or simply well-grown extra plants you'd like to share.

Art Sale

The WHS 'Blooming Art' sale is gathering steam with some of our very own members offering to donate art and volunteering to help. Don't get left out! If you are an artist (or know of someone we should contact) whose art is plant or nature related, we'd love to hear from you. We plan on joining in with an established plant event in the spring to sell the art. So if you're a photographer or illustrator, or if you make jewelry or tee-shirts, or if you create art for gardens, here's your chance to share your art and help WHS in the process. Contact any of the 'Blooming Art' committee with questions or artwork donations.
