“Victor Reiter’s Garden.”

Victor Reiter, Jr. was one of the co-founders of California Horticultural Society and a well-known San Francisco grower, hybridizer and collector of plants and trees.

His family started a nursery behind their home in the early 1930’s. Although the nursery closed in the early 1960’s, Victor continued to plant and maintain the specimens on the property until 1986. The garden is an amazingly successful experiment in growing winter wet and summer dry rock garden plants.

Although he was a true collector (e.g. over 70 varieties of thymes), hybridizer (best known for his fuchsias), and propagator (Arbutus ‘Marina’), Victor was also an artist. Ted will share this amazing garden using digitalized pictures from Mr. Reiter’s original photographs.

Our speaker Ted Kipping is a life member of WHS and many other horticultural, botanical and scientific groups. He has a keen interest in arboriculture, regional horticulture, regional botany and specialty pruning subjects. Every year, he seeks to visit ecosystems new to him in order to acquire information about how we can better grow wild plants in our gardens. He is especially drawn to deserts, mountaintops, and forests as these areas contain some of the most beautiful and interesting plants. Likewise, he visits regional gardens to learn what grows well there and which trends local garden cultures are exploring. Western Hort met on Wednesday, April 13th, 1988 to hear “Ornamental Grasses for your Garden” presented by John Greenlee. At that time Greenlee Nursery in Pomona had been open for a mere two years, and the newsletter considered it necessary to emphasize that “John Greenlee will speak to us on Ornamental Grasses (not turf grasses!) for our gardens.” It was also stated that John “currently grows over 500 varieties of grasses, sedges, and rushes as well as grass-like plants.” I wonder how many of those John now considers ‘garden worthy’?

April 24th was an “Open Garden Day” with WHS members invited to visit the gardens of Timmy Gallagher, Charlotte Anderson, Linda Gerber, Gamble Garden, Barbara Worl and Green Sun Nursery. The 1988 SF Landscape Garden Show was held at Pier 3, Fort Mason. WHS presented a display with a committee headed by Elizabeth Garbett. Dates of the show ran from April 13th to 17th, just about a month later in the year than this year’s show. And back then, admission cost $7.

The Plant Notes began by praising Daphne Dorney’s garden “…consists largely of Australian shrubs with underplantings of drought-tolerant plants such as artemisias and helianthemums, with extra color in spring from naturalized So. African bulbs. It is a showy garden and never looks parched. Daphne waters, at most, only once a month during summer.” Definitely a woman with an eye toward the future. Charlotte Anderson showed several euphorbias, one of which, E. polychroma, according to Elizabeth Garbett “…rather overdoes the self-sowing.” Bart O’Brien brought in a selection of “mostly native plants”, Achlys triphylla (“The common name “vanilla leaf” comes from the fragrance of the leaves which contain coumarin, a vanilla substitute. The fragrance is retained after the leaf is dried, accounting for its other common name, sweet after death.”), Allium hyalinum (“Bart claims that it is not invasive—unlike such scourgies of the garden as A. neapolitanum”). Ed Carman showed a collection of Rhodohypoxis bauri in bloom, something rather new from South Africa. He had been building up stock in order to start selling these bulbs. Unfortunately the freeze of 1990 was destined to kill almost all of his plants. And Dick Dunmire wowed the crowd with “the 27-inch-long lavender racemes of Wisteria floribunda ‘Longissima’.” ~Nancy Schramm
